Webinar on "Let the job find you, Mastering job Interviews"

On Friday, April 21, 2023, a webinar titled "Let the job find you, Mastering job Interviews" was held in collaboration with VAAVE, Enriching Alumni Relations. Mr. Amol Rokade, a 2015 alumnus and senior Laravel specialist with BTC Power in the USA, served as the subject matter expert for the same. Faculty members and more than 50 students attended the session. Contrary to popular assumption, Mr. Amol Rokade began by stating that "the most important part of the interview is preparation." Preparation is often necessary to ace a job interview. Despite the fact that every employer has slightly distinct procedures for choosing and interviewing job prospects, the following advice may help you succeed regardless of the format or style of the interview: Do thorough study in advance, consider the culture of the firm while choosing your attire. Prepare a list of inquiries, a brief introduction, and Get in the correct frame of mind, start with light chat, appear confident, and limit your responses to the topic. On a positive note, wrap up the interview, etc.

Money Detection for Visually Impaired Person

We see visually challenged folks all around us in our daily lives. They are having difficulties carrying out their daily tasks. One of the issues is to use bank money to make purchases and dealing with financial fraud. In light of this, we have suggested a system that will automatically identify the currency and provide output in audio format. Our system is splitted up into various modules. Using a camera, we are gathering data for the first module. Following pre-processing, the deep learning model will determine whether the note is genuine or not, and if it is, it will classify the note. After that we utilized NLP to extract text from the Note and create the text. The created text is converted into audio with the aid of the Text-to-Speech Module, and the audio output is provided to blind users via a Raspberry Pi-connected audio device. We are concentrating on the following various system goals :

- To determine the veracity of a bank note based on visual input from a camera.
- To assign the correct class to the bank note.
- To generate proper text for the predicted note.
- To turn text from the third goal into speech.
- To deliver such speech output via audio equipment to a visually impaired person.

System Architecture

The system contains four sub-modules as follows:

- Object Detection : With object detection, one can identify many items that are visible individually in a single image. Also, it will enable us to locate a specific object in a picture using coordinates. There are many object detection algorithms designed to recognize the object in an environment like Yolo, Detectron2. We are utilizing both of these approaches in our model to determine whether the note is false or not.
- Image Classification : We can eventually classify an image in a unique way thanks to image classification, which also helps us identify class designations. The image will be classified into the Rs. 10, Rs. 20, Rs. 50, Rs. 100, Rs. 200, Rs. 500, and Rs. 2000 note classes in this module. We tried Resnet50 and VGG16 for this and discovered that VGG16 performed better than Resnet50 for our task, hence we chose VGG16 as our classification base model.

- Text Extraction : In text extraction, we concentrate on obtaining meaningful data for validation purposes as well as number denominations from the acquired image. To extract the text from the image of the bank note, we are utilizing the Python pytesseract module.
- Text-to-speech : To help a person who is visually impaired, a text-to-speech algorithm is designed to take the text as an input from the model and convert it to audio output. We utilized the Python tool pyttsx3 to properly transform the human-understandable text to speech. This module provides a variety of capabilities, including customized voice, cross-platform compatibility, ease of use, and offline functionality.
